Tim Crawley, a 2001 Marist graduate, speaks to one of Walt Fox's government classes about his campaign to run for the United States Senate. His talk detailed his strategy to officially run on the Republican ticket, though he is registered as Independent, in an effort to capture votes in a moderate region between the two parties. Marist has now added another club to the list! Sophomores Margo Werner, Isabelle Hardt, Colleen Peterson, and junior Abby Crowell put their heads together and created Cupcake Club. The club will decorate cupcakes generously donated by Divine Cupcake and sell them at bake sales during breaks and lunches.

The money made from selling cupcakes will go to underfunded clubs that don't get as much recognition on campus. "We started the club to help newer clubs like Ultimate out with getting money as a way of giving back to the Marist community," said Crowell, one of the founders of the club. To sign up for a remind-101 of when the club will be meeting text @CC401 to 971-717-3992.

Student body votes for next year's ASB officers

By Ben Schepergerdes

Words of support, promise and leadership echoed through the Marist gymnasium on Wednesday afternoon at the annual Associated Student Body Election Assembly. Students gave speeches to the student body in an effort to gain their votes to be elected into the positions of ASB Secretary, Treasurer, Vice President, and President next fall.

Sophomore Madisyn Bryant was the first to speak at the assembly in hopes to become student council's next secretary. Her speech emphasized her work ethic and included pictures of herself at her best moments, but also at the low points. Junior Sean Kimball followed Bryant and gave his speech for the position of treasurer. Both candidates were sure to note that they were unopposed in their campaigns for office.

Junior Ezra Alltucker was the first to give his speech for the office of vice president as he spoke about his previous involvement in school activities and hopes to improve Marist. His opponent, Junior Jacob Hubbard, focused his speech on comparing himself to a train and spoke about how well suited he was for the position, which proved true as he was elected VP.

For the office of ASB president, junior Karson Silver's speech consisted primarily of promises about making high school more memorable. Also running for president, junior Natalie Weymouth started her speech with a personal rendition of the "selfie song" and then spoke about her intentions to try to create more diverse clubs and activities along with making assemblies more enjoyable. She concluded with her campaign slogan: "If you want something done, Natalie is the one." Weymouth won the race for ASB President.

The senior class, who do not vote, enjoyed a surprise early dismissal.

Bunco for the Babies

By Karlin Andersen

"Bunco!" Exclaimed the ladies of the Marist community Tuesday evening as a colorful, turtle shaped baby toy was passed from winner to winner.

Along with serving homemade desserts and collecting tips, the ten Mr. Spartan contestants also entertained the crowd of 90 women who showed up to play the dice game, Bunco, in the Marist Academic Resource Center (the library) and to help raise funds for Children's Miracle Network.

The contestants raced in a baby-themed relay which included packing a diaper bag, singing lullabies and putting a small stuffed bear in a diaper and car seat much to the delight of the crowd.

Throughout the night, gift cards to Barnes & Noble and Fletchers were given away to the winners of Mr. Spartan Trivia and tickets to the pageant were given to the winner of the last Bunco game.

There are two more opportunities to support Mr. Spartan including the Mr. Spartan "Luau for the Littles" dance tonight at 8 p.m. (cost is $5) and the pageant on Saturday the 12, at 7 p.m. (cost is $10).
